

Knud Otterson

Company A, 5th Minnesota Infantry
Volunteer 1862-1865

DRAFT

Knud Otterson

Company A, 5th Minnesota Infantry
Volunteer 1862-1865

Vernon Ege
and
Jane Otterson Miller

2012

Mississippi River

Fort Snelling, MN, 2012

Modern riverboat, Dubuque, IA, 2012

St. Louis, MO, 2010

Historic riverbed Vicksburg, MS 2011

Adapted from Wikipedia

Undated photo of Knud

O 5 Minn.
Knut Otterson
A 5 Co. Reg't Minn. Infantry.

Appears on

Company Descriptive Book

of the organization named above.

DESCRIPTION.

Age 21 years; height 5 feet 5 1/2 inches.
Complexion Light
Eyes Blue; hair Light
Where born Norway
Occupation Farmer

ENLISTMENT.

When Jan. 7, 1862.
Where St. Melling, Minn.
By whom Capt. Nelson; term 3 y'rs.
Remarks: Wagon driver
before Corinth Miss. May 25/62.
Quota Miss. Sept. 19/62.
By battle of Corinth Miss. Oct. 4/62.
Siege of Vicksburg from May 18 to July 4/63.
Mechanics Miss. June 4/63.
at Richmond Va. June 15/63 where he was slightly wounded on foot.
Ours

(388g)

Taylor

Copied.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE.....	1
BACKGROUND.....	2
KNUD’S WAR.....	4
AFTER THE WAR.....	9
GÖL, HALLINGDAL NORWAY.....	11
KENYON, GOODHUE COUNTY MINNESOTA.....	12
CORINTH, MISSISSIPPI.....	13
RICHMOND, LOUSIANA (VICKSBURG).....	15
NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE.....	17
KINDRED, NORTH DAKOTA.....	19
KNUD OTTERSON FAMILY.....	20
COMMENTS.....	21
NAME VARIATIONS.....	23
SOURCES.....	24

LOCATIONS SEEN BY KNUD OTTERSON, 1861-1885

Map by Eric Ege

PREFACE

This document grew out of curiosity about big events that took place long ago and a desire to honor the memory of Knud Otterson who participated in those events as a United States Civil War soldier.

When my wife, Jane Otterson Miller, a Great-grand-daughter of Knud Otterson, and I were preparing to drive from Minnesota to Florida in the winter of 2010 we decided make a side trip to Nashville, Tennessee. We knew that many Civil War battlefields had been preserved and hoped that was the case at Nashville where Knud fought and was wounded in 1864. We discovered that very little of the Nashville battlefield had been preserved. Fortunately, the Battle of Nashville Preservation Society had identified key battle sites and had acquired ownership of Shy's Hill, one of the key geographical features of the battle. It also happened to be the place Confederates attempted to defend against Private Knud Otterson and his Company A, 5th Minnesota Infantry Volunteer Regiment on December 15-16, 1864. We found our visit to Shy's Hill to be very emotional and decided that we wanted to see more sites that Knud had seen.

On our second winter trip to Florida we took a side trip to Mississippi where Knud participated in the siege and capture of the river city of Vicksburg and was wounded at nearby Richmond, Louisiana. On our next trip we went to the Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee /Corinth, Mississippi area where Knud saw his first action as the Army of the Mississippi maneuvered to capture the railroad town of Corinth.

It is difficult to comprehend what Knud saw and participated in. We are removed from those events by approximately 150 years, Knud has been dead almost 90 years and even the people who knew him have been gone for a long time. We know of no letters written by or to Knud and have seen no Civil War era photographs of him. The area around Shy's Hill in Nashville that was unoccupied, treeless countryside is now a wooded suburban neighborhood. Vicksburg and Pittsburg Landing /Shiloh battle grounds are manicured military parks. The original town of Richmond was destroyed during the war and no longer exists. Corinth is a sprawling city extending from the town which was rebuilt after the war. The Mississippi River has even changed course dramatically at Vicksburg. There is very little record of Knud's experiences. Our trips and research were remote attempts to see and understand things that are no longer completely understandable.

This document about Knud Otterson's American Civil War activities was prepared for family members and casual readers. An attempt has been made to be as accurate as possible. If information could be satisfactorily verified it is presented with certainty, if it could not be verified it is presented with qualification.

Hopefully some unknown descendent of Knud will see this document and add family remembrances to it; perhaps someone can even add a letter or Civil War era photograph.

Historical photographs and illustrations were taken from internet sources and family collections, most of which were provided by Knud's Great-grand-daughter Jody Sorenson. Modern photographs were taken by Vernon Ege and Jane Miller.

Vernon Ege

BACKGROUND

Knud was born on January 16, 1842, in Göl, Hallingdal, Norway, thought to be the fourth of nine children of Ottar Ivarsen and Mari Engebretsdtr. Göl was a subsistence farming community in South Central Norway between Oslo and Bergen. Other than his baptism date of February 27, 1842, nothing is known of his life in Norway. The family probably struggled with food shortages resulting from periodic crop failures, including years 1859-1861.

The date of and reason for Knud's emigration from Norway are not known; his obituary stated that he emigrated by himself in 1861. At that time people were leaving Norway for America because of over population, food shortage, opportunity and just plain adventure. Yearly emigration from Norway to the United States probably exceeded 8,000 before and during the early years of the Civil War. Some entered the United States through Castle Garden, New York but most probably entered through Canada and did not leave a record of their arrival.

In late 1861 Knud was living in Kenyon Township, Goodhue County, Minnesota. Minnesota had been a state for less than four years and was in the early stages of European settlement. It was on the edge of the frontier which the native population still considered home. Minnesota had a few small villages, St. Paul and St. Anthony (Minneapolis) were just beginning to develop and most people lived on isolated farms. Fort Snelling, a recently deactivated frontier army post on the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers was less than 40 years old. Kenyon Township was organized in 1858. Many Kenyon area residents were from Norway and many of those came from Göl where Knud was born. They even established a Lutheran congregation that became the Göl Lutheran Church. It is not surprising that Knud would land in Kenyon which was populated in large part from his Norwegian home community.

Approach to Kenyon, 2012

Knud volunteered at Fort Snelling, Minnesota on January 7, 1862. At that time he had been in the United States for only a few months. When he emigrated he may have known of the war and that he would receive a bounty and monthly pay. No

"The Fifth Regiment numbered eight hundred and sixty men, rank and file, at the time of its organization...Like most regiments raised in Minnesota, the Fifth was recruited generally throughout the state, the nucleus of each company being from one of the more populous counties. The members of Company A were principally from Goodhue and Douglas counties."
General L.F.Hubbard

records have been found showing that Knud received a bounty when he volunteered. His Grandson Arthur Otterson understood that Knud received $200 as a substitute for someone who had been drafted but the Federal government did not have a draft until later in the war so he may have received a $200 bounty. He did receive a $400 bounty when he re-volunteered at Black River, Mississippi on February 12, 1864; at the end of the war was being paid $16 monthly.

Adjusting for inflation, an 1864 dollar equals about $14 in 2012. At that rate $16 equals about $224, $200 equals $2,800 and $400 equals $5,600. Knud's pay would have been substantial for the time, especially considering that he probably had nothing when he left Norway. Even though Knud may have had a financial incentive to become a soldier, he may also have believed deeply in the Union cause. Grandson Arthur Otterson remembered his grandfather's commitment to that cause; he wanted the Union to be preserved and supported emancipation of slaves. His commitment led him to re-enlist in 1864 when he could have gone back to Minnesota. He must have had contact with many freed slaves and may have even been in battle alongside what at the time were called "Colored Troops" so it is understandable that he would have been offended by slavery.

Transportation during the Civil War, especially mass transportation was dependent upon water and newly developing railroads. The Mississippi, Cumberland, Ohio, Tennessee and Red (south) rivers and dirt trails were transportation routes that Knud was familiar with. Where possible Civil War supplies were delivered by railroad but Knud probably never rode on a train. Most communication was hand delivered after traveling by water or horse. Permanent telegraph lines followed the railroads and temporary lines were sometimes strung between army units and army headquarters. Army commanders could often, but not always communicate with Washington via telegraph lines.

Knud may have had a brother named Ole. Army records show that an Ole Otterson, age 20 volunteered from Kenyon and served in the 5th Minnesota Volunteers at about the same time as Knud who was also 20. Ole died of disease at Camp Sherman, Mississippi near Vicksburg on September 1, 1863. He may have been Knud's brother Ole but two factors make that questionable: Knud said he immigrated alone, and Ole's army records show he volunteered with the approval of his father named Oter Olesen. Census records show many Ottersons living in Southern Minnesota in the 1860's and 70's, most were not related to each other. In addition to Knud and Ole, Albert Otterson age 22, also apparently not a sibling of Knud, volunteered from Kenyon and served in the same company as Knud. Census records even show a second Kenyon area Knud Otterson, who apparently did not participate in the war, born in about 1843. At that time Norwegians were named at birth and further identified as son or daughter of their father. The father's name became an official last or family name in the United States. Ole's grave site is not recorded. He was probably initially buried near where he died, then re-interred after the war in one of more than 13,000 unmarked Civil War graves in Vicksburg National Cemetery.

Vicksburg cemetery 2011

Neither the Union or Confederacy had a single army, they both had many armies. Depending on the date, Knud was in the Army Of The Tennessee or the Army of The Mississippi as a member of the 5th Minnesota Volunteer regiment. In preparation for battle officers of both sides preferred to line the soldiers shoulder to shoulder in several ranks by company and regiment facing the enemy in an open field. At the direction of officers regiments would attempt to move as units filling gaps in the line when men were killed or wounded with men who were following the front line. After and during bombardment the attacking force would use their muskets and hopefully charge to use their bayonets to drive the enemy from the field. Opposing armies each often fielded 20,000 or more soldiers.

KNUD'S WAR

Abraham Lincoln was elected in 1860 and inaugurated President of the United States on March 4, 1861. Before inauguration seven Southern states, upset with Lincoln's election voted to secede from the United States and form the Confederate States of America. Ft. Sumter, a Federal or Union property in Charleston harbor was attacked by the Confederate state of South Carolina on April 12 and surrendered on April 13, 1861. Eventually four additional states joined the Confederacy. Responding to secession, Lincoln called for 75,000 volunteers for a "militia to execute the laws of the Union". Knud Otterson, a very recent immigrant from Norway, living in the newly formed state of Minnesota, responded to Lincoln's call and began service at Fort Snelling, Minnesota on January 7, 1862. On March 24, 1862 he was mustered into the 5th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry Regiment as a private in Company A at Fort Snelling, Minnesota. In addition to Knud eight hundred fifty nine other officers and men were also initially mustered in.

At the direction of General Henry Halleck, under orders from Governor Alexander Ramsey, Knud boarded the riverboat Hawk Eye State on May 14, 1862 with seven companies of the 5th Minnesota destined for Pittsburg Landing, Tennessee. Three companies stayed in Minnesota because of war with Sioux Indians. Traveling on the Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee rivers he landed at either Pittsburg or nearby Hamburg Landing on the Tennessee River on about May 24, about 7 weeks after the bloody Battle of Shiloh near Pittsburg Landing. For the next 41 months he was a Civil War combat infantryman marching long distances while carrying up to 50 pounds of equipment, in good weather and bad, often foraging for food and almost always sleeping in tents or on bare ground. He saw and contributed to massive death and destruction.

Pittsburg Landing, 2012

President Lincoln made the strategic decision to control the Mississippi River and its tributaries, to separate Texas and Louisiana from the rest of the Confederate States and to provide access to the Deep South. To Lincoln it was the key to victory. Knud's entire military career was devoted to Lincoln's decision to control the Mississippi River. He was a member of the 5th Minnesota as it participated in thirteen campaigns, five sieges and thirty four battles, skirmishes and minor engagements in Alabama,

"See what a lot of land these fellows hold, of which Vicksburg is the key...Let us get Vicksburg and all that country is ours. The war can never be brought to a close until that key is in our pocket."

President A. Lincoln

Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri and Tennessee. Officers claimed they were victors in every battle and all campaigns but one. He was wounded twice before ending his service occupying Alabama.

When Knud landed in Tennessee he was most likely disoriented, dirty, hot and tired. Both temperature and humidity were high. Despite fatigue he was immediately thrown into the thick of war as a member of the Army of the Mississippi which was closing in on Confederate Corinth, Mississippi. The 5th Minnesota was sent on a forced march in pursuit of Confederates during which it

"There were more deaths in the regiment resulting from the excessive effort required and the intolerable heat endured during these marches than it suffered in some of the most desperate battles in which it was subsequently engaged"

General L. F. Hubbard

suffered its first casualties. On May 28 Knud found himself in battle near Farmington, Mississippi, where the 5th Minnesota suffered 16 additional casualties. After Farmington Knud continued marching to intercept Confederates who had abandoned Corinth. About this time he must have had his first contact with escaped slaves who were gathering near Corinth. When the enemy temporarily left the area the 5th Minnesota camped at disease ridden Clear Creek where it suffered more casualties, eventually moving to a better camp near Tuscumbia, Alabama.

Knud was back in action in early fall when Confederates attempted to retake Corinth. Two railroads crossed at the edge of Corinth making it an important transportation hub for both the Union and Confederacy. Control of Corinth made it possible for Union armies to attack further South and the Confederate government was determined to prevent that. Confederate forces began their unsuccessful final push to re-capture Corinth on the hot morning of October 3. The 5th Minnesota was not directly involved in fighting on the 3rd and at the end of the day was posted in town and slept on the streets ready to be reserves on October 4. In early morning October 4 they were bombarded by Confederate artillery. After a pause, artillery bombardment resumed around 11 AM. With the temperature around 90°F the second bombardment was followed by a Confederate infantry assault which penetrated Union lines. Confederates entered Corinth near where the two railroads crossed, exactly where the 5th Minnesota was positioned with Knud's Company A in front as snipers. At that critical time, when the Confederates could have continued victoriously into Corinth, the 5th Minnesota fired several musket volleys and charged the enemy driving them out of Corinth into eventual defeat. They were credited with making victory at Corinth possible.

Corinth rail crossing, 2012

"Stunned by the terrible execution of the volleys poured into it, the confused mass of the enemy halted and fell back, closely pressed by the Fifth Regiment"

General L. F. Hubbard

After Corinth, where more than 6,500 Union and Confederate soldiers died in two days, the 5th Minnesota, joined by three companies that had been left in Minnesota, was assigned to General Ulysses S. Grant's Second Brigade Fifteenth Army Corps and began moving toward Vicksburg, Mississippi. When the army had a setback losing supplies and a communication line to Confederates it went into winter quarters near La Grange, Tennessee. While at La Grange, Grant assigned the Fifteenth Army Corps, which included the 5th Minnesota, to the command of General William Tecumseh Sherman. Sherman commanded the Fifteenth Corps until after the surrender of Vicksburg and was eventually given other commands while the 5th Minnesota remained part of the Second Brigade, through the remainder of the war.

During the winter of 1862-63, as Grant prepared to move south to capture Vicksburg, Mississippi he directed Sherman and the 5th Minnesota to pursue Confederate troops through west Tennessee. In early February they joined other units near Memphis. After traveling on the Mississippi and marching through brushy, wet Louisiana lowlands west of the Mississippi River, the 5th Minnesota arrived south of Vicksburg on May 2 where they were ferried across the Mississippi River to Grand Gulf, Mississippi. Sherman's elite troops, led by the 5th Minnesota, then marched east to Jackson, the capital of Mississippi, with only the weapons, ammunition and food that individual soldiers could carry. Their tasks were to control supply routes from Jackson to Vicksburg and prevent Confederates from reinforcing Vicksburg. After entering Jackson on May 14 they camped on the capitol grounds and set about destroying everything of military value. Knud was listed as present for May and June 1863 but may not have been on the campaign to Jackson as he was also listed as left ill at Duckport, Louisiana on May 2. It is also possible that there was confusion regarding which Private Otterson was left at Duckport as Ole Otterson's record also indicates he was left at Duckport on May 2.

Knud probably participated in an unsuccessful bloody Union assault on Confederate defensive lines northeast of Vicksburg on May 22. Positioned in a wooded ravine, the 5th Minnesota was not directly in the Confederate line of fire and did not suffer the large number of casualties experienced by other units. After the failed assault Grant concluded that Vicksburg could not be taken by assault and made preparations for a siege.

"The slaughter was simply horrible. The heaps of dead and wounded men of themselves formed an obstruction almost as effective as the abatis they were seeking to surround."

General L. F. Hubbard

During the siege, the 5th Minnesota participated in three separate outlying battles, including one at Richmond, Louisiana where Knud suffered a slight foot wound on June 15. Richmond was located west of Vicksburg on the Roundabout Bayou which drained low, flat, wet cotton fields and brushy uncultivated land. The 5th Minnesota had passed through Richmond in May on their way to Grand Gulf. A Confederate force later occupied the town to harass Union forces during the siege and the 5th Minnesota was sent with other units to eliminate the threat. In the process of driving the confederates from Richmond they also carried out the order to destroy the town.

Jane at Richmond, 2011

After months of fighting and more than 8,000 Union and Confederate deaths, Vicksburg surrendered on July 4, 1863. The 5th Minnesota, having survived a horrific bombardment the night of July 3-4, was sheltered behind a levy on the West bank of the Mississippi as Grant and the 4th Minnesota entered Vicksburg on East bank bluffs high above the river. Soon after surrender many members of the 5th were ferried across the river to inspect Vicksburg for themselves.

Part of the army that captured Vicksburg, and more than 29,000 Confederate soldiers, stayed to occupy the city while Sherman's troops, including the 5th Minnesota known to the Rebels as "hellsnortn fellows" began pursuing Confederate forces that had tried to reinforce Vicksburg. The Confederates put up token resistance near Jackson and then rapidly departed. It was time for Knud and his companions to rest, which they did at Camp Sherman on the Big Black River. Fighting stopped for a time but dying did not. Some died from wounds and many others, including Ole Otterson perished from disease. Leaving no effects, Ole was buried in an unmarked grave and probably quickly forgotten by all but a few.

In early fall the 5th Minnesota was back in action participating in two expeditions and four fights, eventually finding themselves back in winter camp at LaGrange, Tennessee. In early 1864, they moved by riverboat to Vicksburg and then marched east to camp on the Big Black River. While at camp the term of Knud's original enlistment expired and he and almost all of his fellow volunteers reenlisted and became official veterans. Along with approximately 10,000 others he was temporarily transferred to the Sixteenth Army Corps commanded by General A. J. Smith under General Banks to head west in the Red River Expedition while Sherman and his troops prepared to march eastward through the South. The Red River Expedition was their first campaign under Smith and their first and only unsuccessful campaign.

Black River 2011

On March 12 they began marching up the Red River Valley into Louisiana to destroy a Confederate army of estimated 25,000 to 40,000 men. Moving west the 5th Minnesota defeated Confederate defenders at several sites, but on April 9 found themselves in rear guard defensive duty when commanders ordered a withdrawal. As the army moved back toward the Mississippi, the 5th Minnesota was in almost constant action until they reached the Mississippi River on April 21. Officers of the 5th were proud of their part in the Red River Campaign; a campaign described as a military failure resulting from misconduct by superiors.

"...hardly a day passed that the regiment was not in some form under fire."

Genera; L. F. Hubbard

Around the end of May, Knud was issued new clothing and equipment before moving north on the Mississippi River in anticipation of his promised veteran's 30 day furlough. Along the way he was in another fight where the 5th Minnesota suffered additional casualties. He boarded a riverboat bound for St. Paul, Minnesota on June 17 to begin his furlough.

"Their uniforms had been through several campaigns and were soiled and much worn...its tout ensemble was positively shabby..."

General L. F. Hubbard

The 5th rejoined the war in August near Holly Springs, Arkansas on the Tallahatchie River. Through-out August and September Knud was on a near continuous march in pursuit of Confederates through Tennessee, Arkansas and

"It was tough. There were little things. They made regular twenty-five mile marches...shoes...weren't left foot and right foot, they were the same foot."

Shelby Foote

Missouri. One march went from Kansas completely across Missouri ending at St. Louis. General Hubbard who had direct command of the 5th Minnesota later recalled that they marched over 700 miles through difficult conditions in all kinds of weather with few supplies and moldy food, making foraging a necessity.

In early November, still under command of Smith, the 5th boarded the W. L. Ewing, part of a riverboat fleet bound for Nashville. The Ewing sank without casualties near St. Louis on November 24 and Knud was transferred to a second boat before arriving at Nashville at the end of November while Sherman's troops were on their notoriously destructive march through Georgia. A claim has been made that Knud deserted on November 24, the day the Ewing sank. It is highly likely that he was only briefly missing in the confusion following the sinking. National Archive documents and his presence at Nashville in mid-December indicate he was with his company in all of November and December, 1864.

Knud was assigned defensive duty south of Nashville. During a sleet storm 26,000 or more Confederates prepared to attack and retake the city which had been a Union supply center since the early days of the war. On December 15, after the storm weakened Knud was sent on attack. He slept in the field on the cold wet night of December 15-16. On December 16 the 5th Minnesota attacked and routed Confederates from Compton's Hill, now known as Shy's Hill for a Confederate officer who died there. The Confederate army that attempted to take Nashville suffered more than 6,000 casualties, was destroyed and never returned to the war.

Shy's Hill, 2010

Knud was one of the 106 - 5th Minnesota casualties at Nashville, wounded on December 16 from a shell fragment in his left hip. He probably received minimal treatment where he fell before being taken to the Cumberland Hospital in Nashville. On January 9, 1865 he was one of the first patients admitted to Jefferson General Hospital at Jeffersonville, Indiana which held 2,400 other soldier patients. Initial records indicate his wound was severe, hospital records indicate it was slight.

Knud returned to duty on March 16, 1865. He must have then participated in the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely before participating in the capture of Mobile, Alabama on April 12. This was the last fighting Knud would see. He was enroute to Montgomery, Alabama when Robert E. Lee surrendered his army to Grant at Appomattox effectively ending the war. He was probably in Montgomery on April 14 when President Lincoln was assassinated. At the end Knut was stationed near Demopolis, headquarters of the force occupying Alabama. In late August he learned that his services were no longer needed. Along with other 5th Minnesota Regiment survivors he returned up the Mississippi River to Minnesota and was mustered out at Fort Snelling on September 6, 1865. Two hundred forty eight members of the 5th Minnesota were killed in battle or died from disease. Only three hundred seventy of 1,163 total members were mustered out with the regiment. Less than half who volunteered for Knud's Company A in 1862 returned to Minnesota in late 1865.

Total Civil War Casualties

Deaths 624,726 Wounded 486,259

AFTER THE WAR

Knud returned to Minnesota, was mustered out at Fort Snelling and became a civilian war veteran in the fall of 1865, but had he returned home? Having left his home in Norway four years earlier he had most likely lived in Minnesota for only a few months. Who did he know in Minnesota and where did he go when he returned from war? Other than his uniform, what belongings did he have? He had left a disciplined life shared with and directed by others, large numbers of whom did not survive. He had seen and participated in extremely grueling, violent, dangerous and destructive activities interspersed with long periods of boredom. Returning to Minnesota he would have left his comrades in arms and been free to come and go as he pleased. There would have been no one to account to or to pay him, circumstances that could have been very disorienting.

Almost no records have been found of Knud's activity after the war. His marriage to Annie and the birth of his children in Minnesota were not recorded. No land

"Judging from the many bleaching bones of the buffalo scattered over the plains it is evident that the very nutritious grasses of this country afforded fine pasturage..."

Horace B. Crandall

ownership records have been found in Minnesota. Even though 3 of his children appear in the 1880 census living with the other Kenyon area Knut Otterson family, Knud and Annie do not even appear in available census records until the Dakota Territory census of 1885. His name first appears as a land owner in Barrie Township, Richland County, North Dakota, June, 1885.

North boundary of Otterson property,
2012

Known family records are basic; Knud and Annie (or Unni) were married at Faribault, Minnesota in 1873, had 14 children and worked as farmers. They and 5 of their children probably moved from Minnesota after 1880, settling on hilly land in sight of the village of Kindred, Dakota Territory, now North Dakota, a community that was then, and still is populated by a large number of people with connections to Göl. He bought most of his land from the Northern Pacific Railroad even though he could have obtained land through the Homestead Act. He eventually accumulated over 240 acres.

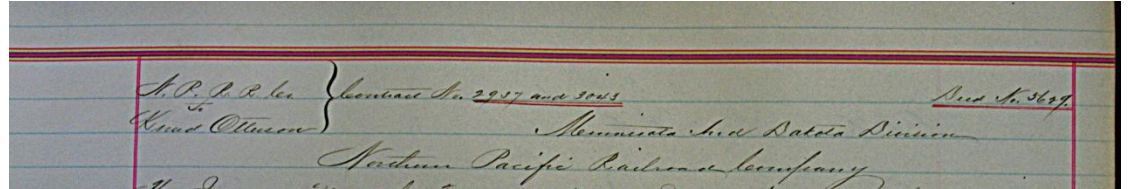

Photo of deed from NPRR

His Granddaughter, Nettie Otterson Peterson did write about seeing him shortly before his death and remembered him as a thin man with a grey beard. She also recalled that he would become quite agitated, talk loudly and pace when discussing his Civil War experiences.

Knud and Annie, along with others who also had roots in Göl, Norway, appear to have been members of the now disbanded Göl Lutheran Church near Kindred. He died in 1923 and is buried with Annie and several of their children in the Göl Lutheran Church Cemetery near Kindred.

Göl, Hallingdal Norway

Göl Stave church, moved to Oslo

Google Earth image

Jeanne Olsen print of Göl area purchased in Bergen, Norway

Göl area photo by visitnorway.us

Kenyon, Goodhue County Minnesota

Monument at Red Wing, 2012

Kenyon Township, Goodhue County (county seat Red Wing) received credit for Knud when he volunteered for the Union army. When he returned from war he may have lived in nearby Rice County as family records indicate he and Annie were married at Faribault, county seat of Rice County. Neither county has records of Knud or Annie. Census records show 3 of their children living with another Rice County family in 1880.

County records, 2012

Mississippi River at Red Wing, 2012

Goodhue farm land, 2012

Approach to Faribault, 2012

Gol Lutheran Church, 2010

Corinth, Mississippi

Union re-enactor, 2012

Oak Home ca: 1856, 2012

Contraband (freed slave) Camp, 2012

Confederate re-enactor company, 2012

Civil War Interpretive Center, 2012

Battlefield grave, 2012

Corinth battle letter

My dear Aunt Mary

“...In the early part of the action I was posted in town as a reserve, to be used at any point where most needed. The reserves in every fight are always selected from the best troops, as they are brought into action when the battle becomes most desperate, and used at those points most hotly pressed by the enemy. The battle was raging with terrific fury along the entire extent of our lines. The rebels were fighting with a determination that could not be excelled. They outnumbered us greatly and it seemed at one time as though all was lost. They charged in heavy columns against our lines, and succeeded in breaking through on the right of where my regiment lay. Our troops became scattered and retreated in confusion, leaving a gap in our lines several hundred yards in length, through which the enemy boldly pushed and in large numbers entered the streets of Corinth, capturing one of our batteries in their progress. In the meantime I had moved my Regiment into a position to secure them, and as they reached the heart of town, I poured into them a dozen volleys in rapid succession, which terribly decimated their ranks. They fought desperately to break through the position I had taken, but my gallant boys would not give an inch. The position my regiment occupied gave me a great advantage, which the rebels could not overcome, and they soon gave way and began to retreat. I followed after at a run...”

Yours truly

L. F. Hubbard
Col. Comg 2nd Brigade
2nd Divsn
Army Miss.

Richmond, Louisiana (Vicksburg)

Vicksburg's 1850's Courthouse, 2011

Richmond battle site, 2011

Current town site, 2011

Roundabout Bayou, 2011

Monument to casualties, Knud included, 2011

Aimed at Vicksburg, 2011

BURNING OF RICHMOND

During the second week of May, 1863, the Federals abandoned their supply line connecting Milliken's Bend with Hard Times. On June 4, the Confederates reoccupied Richmond. From Richmond, Gen. Dick Taylor launched an offensive to destroy the Union bases at Lake Providence, Milliken's Bend, and Young's Point. When these attacks failed, Taylor hastened to south Louisiana. Gen. J. J. Walker was left in charge of Confederate efforts to relieve Vicksburg from the west. Before Walker could act, the Federals sent a strong force, led by Gen. J. A. Mower, into Madison Parish. On June 15, the Federals moved against Walker's command. Following a brief rear guard action fought about three-quarters of a mile north of this point, the Confederates evacuated Richmond. Before returning to his base, Mower had his soldiers burn Richmond. The town was never rebuilt.

Richmond battle report

Headquarters, 5th Reg. Infantry, Minn. Vol's.
Young's Point, Louisiana
June 20, 1863

"...I was ordered by General Mower to deploy six companies of my regiment as skirmishers, using the remaining four as reserve, and move forward, ascertain more definitely the position the enemy occupied and his probable strength. The approach to the locality in which the enemy was posted led across a smooth open field, which afforded no cover for the skirmishers whatever, hence the men were greatly exposed and their movements fully apparent to the enemy. Through this open field, about a half mile in front of the main body of the enemy, and running parallel with my line of skirmishers, was a deep ditch, skirted by a thick growth of bushes and small timber, under cover of which the rebel skirmishers supported by a regiment of infantry were posted. When within thirty yards of this cover and in point blank range of the enemy's guns, we received a heavy volley from his skirmishers, and the regiment in reserve. The men at once fell flat upon the ground, the weeds and tall grass affording them partial protection. A sharp skirmish fight ensued of perhaps twenty minutes duration, during which a charge of the enemy made with a design of capturing the skirmishers was repulsed. By this time our main column had formed line of battle and advanced to within supporting distance of the position we occupied. The rebel skirmishers now retired upon their main body, which had also fallen back and taken position on the opposite bank of a bayou, that separated us from the town.

I again advanced, moving in the face of a fire of grape and canister, from a battery the enemy had in position on the bank of the bayou, and when within easy range of his sharpshooters, halted. Two batteries of artillery were now brought forward and opened upon the guns of the enemy. A sharp artillery fight followed, lasting more than an hour, during which the enemy effected an evacuation of the place retreating on the road to Delhi..."

Respectfully, your ob't servant
L. F. Hubbard
Colonel Commanding Regiment

(among 8 listed as casualties: Company A, wounded – Private Knut Otterson, in foot with grape shot.)

Nashville, Tennessee

Minn., US and Confederate Flags on Shy's Hill, 2010

Battle sign, 2010

Battle monument, 2010

Confederate battle headquarters, 2010

Nashville battle report

Nashville, Tennessee, December 18th, 1864

“...At eight o'clock on the morning of the 16th, I was directed to form my Regiment on the left of the 9th Minnesota, outside the works constructed the night previous, and to deploy a line of skirmishers in my front. As soon as the line was formed the order to move forward was given and our line was advanced, under heavy fire, nearly a mile and to within about one hundred rods of a strong line of entrenchments occupied by the enemy in large force. Here the line was halted and the brigade formed in two lines, the 5th Minnesota on the left, and in the front line, the 3rd brigade being on my left. Entrenching tools were sent to the regiment and I caused temporary breastworks to be constructed to protect the men from the enemy's sharpshooters. About three o'clock in the afternoon I received orders from the Colonel Commanding, to be in readiness to charge the enemy's works in our front, at a moments notice, and at a quarter past four p. m., the order to forward was given, which being repeated along the line, the 5th Minnesota, with bayonets fixed, moved over the breastworks in their front, into the open field which lay between them and the enemy's works, and at a double quick rushed forward under the most terrific and withering fire of musketry and artillery, it has ever been my fortune to behold or encounter, yet forward our line pressed, and soon the colors of the 5th Minnesota, were planted, the first in the brigade, upon the rebel entrenchments, and the enemy were driven from their fortified position. The regiment pursued, capturing hundreds of prisoners, among whom was Brigadier General Jackson, and many officers.”

Respectfully submitted

WILLIAM B. GERE

Lt. Col. Comdg. 5th Regt. Minn. Vet. Vol. Infy

Kindred, North Dakota

Current plat map

1897 plat map

The Otterson farm was in Barrie Township, Richland County within sight of Kindred which is in Cass County. It is not currently under cultivation. Part of the property was in Annie's name and Knud eventually owned an additional nearby parcel.

Entrance to Knud's home site, 2012

Business district, 2012

Church cemetery, 2006

Former NPRR line, 2012

Knud Otterson family

Knud Otterson Annie Benson
 b 1/16/1842 b 3/3/1854
 d 6/28/1923 d 10/20/1944

Ole
 b 12/23/1875 d 6/9/1937
 Marie(Mary)
 b 12/9/1877
 Ottin K
 b 1/24/1879 d 2/2/1937
 Anetta A.
 b 4/2/1880 d 5/28/1903
 Birgit Oline
 b 11/25/1881 d 12/23/1936
 Boletta
 b 12/26/1883 d 10/24/1972
 Edward
 b 11/23/1884 d 11/13/1968
 Anna Marie
 b 4/1/1886 d 1974
 Albert K.
 b 1/2/1888 d 8/15/1959
 Oscar
 b 12/6/1890 d 8/17/1984
 Henning Knut
 b 9/8/1891 d 12/27/1971
 Tilla
 b 7/7/1893 d 11/26/1990
 Iver K.
 b 9/16/1895 d 7/5/1960
 Fred Arthur
 b 1/7/1897 d 9/17/1897

Knud and Annie

Ole

Anna

Henning

Ottine

Birgit

Marie

Edward

Tilla

Oscar

Albert

Iver

COMMENTS

We only know a broad outline, none of the details of Knud's life and his time as a soldier. Information about him was difficult to find; it would have been almost impossible to search for Knud before computers and the internet which made it possible to start the search from home.

Most of Knud's experiences described here occurred 150 years before this document was written. Knud was a private; much has been recorded about and by officers but little about individual privates. He appears to never have been able to read or write English and left no known personal record of his experiences. No family record has been found and many descendants do not even know that Knud was a Civil War soldier. Documentation used here included Knud's service records available from the National Archives, the original and reprinted versions of Minnesota in the Civil War and Indian Wars and the Annual Report of the Adjutant General to the Legislature of Minnesota Session of 1864. Additional information was from documents held by the Minnesota Historical Society, property, marriage, birth and death records of Minnesota and North Dakota counties. Information was also obtained from census reports of Minnesota, North Dakota and the United States, and to a lesser extent Norway. The areas surrounding Corinth, Mississippi, Vicksburg, Mississippi and Nashville, Tennessee were visited and photographed.

One original source claims Knud deserted on November 24, 1864 near St. Louis, Missouri. That claim is repeated in some later Civil War accounts including the book Ole Goes to War-Men From Norway Who Fought in America's Civil War. It is a harsh claim that appears to be unjustified. In November, 1864 the members of the 5th Minnesota were transported by boat to Nashville, Tennessee. On November 24 – the reported day of Knud's desertion - the W.L. Ewing, a boat they were on, sank near St. Louis; the soldiers were rescued and transferred to another boat to continue their journey to Nashville. It is likely that Knud was briefly missing in confusion that must have surrounded the sinking. It is known that Knud was with the 5th Minnesota at Nashville as he was wounded in battle there on December 16, 1864. In addition, his pay records for November-December 1864 show that he was paid for service during that entire time. When he applied for a pension someone noted that records show he was a deserter and someone else appeared to note that Lucius Hubbard, the commanding officer of the 5th Minnesota during much of the war, corrected Knud's record. Knud was denied a pension because there appeared to be no effects from his wounds, not because he was a deserter. Finally his National Archive record and other sources show that he mustered out with the 5th Minnesota in September, 1865.

For several months in mid-1865 Knud was stationed near Montgomery, Alabama as the Union army maintained order in a formerly belligerent community which was expected to integrate people who had until recently been slaves. During the Civil Rights movement of the 1960's descendants of those slaves finally began to experience results that Knud had fought for in the 1860's. It took more than 100 years to begin resolving one of the major issues of the Civil War; abolition of slavery and guarantee of civil rights for people who had no rights prior to the Civil War.

Immigration was a background issue to slavery and civil rights during the Civil War. Knud was an immigrant. Many citizens, in particular wealthy land owners in Southern states were opposed to immigrants and their settlement of the American West. Knud and his fellow recent immigrants from various European countries constituted a significant percentage of the Northern troops. Like Knut most immigrants probably served as privates and officers who were fluent in English tended to have been born in the United States. The issue of slavery was addressed and slavery was abolished but the issue of civil rights was not faced by the country for one hundred years. The issue of immigration has not been addressed yet.

Many questions remain about Knud. Did Knud obtain United States citizenship? Why and how did he leave Norway? Why did he volunteer, how did he feel about being shot at and about shooting at others and what were his emotions at and after the end of the war? What did he do and where did he go from the time he mustered out in 1865 to the time he purchased property in Dakota Territory in 1885? Why were 3 of his children living with another family, Knud and Julia Otterson during the 1880 census – where were their parents, Knud and Annie? Why did he buy property instead of homesteading? Who was Annie, where was she from? How did he and Annie meet and where did they marry? Most of these questions and more no longer have answers!

NAME VARIATIONS

Knud	Otterson
Knut	Otersen
Knutt	Ottenson
Knute	Otterdon
Kent	Ottoson
Canute	Otson
Newt	Olson
Newton	Auterson

SOURCES

Archives

Minnesota Historical Society	Adjutant General Pension Records. Allotment Rolls, 1861-1863. Alphabetical List of Minnesota Volunteers in the Civil War, 1915. Compiled Muster Rolls: 5th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry Regiment, Companies A-K. General Communication (1861-1865): Official Communications 5th Regiment Infantry. Lists of Recruits Credited to Each Town and County. Minnesota Soldiers in Hospitals. Monthly Report of Soldiers in Memphis Hospitals, June, 1864-June, 1865. Monthly Returns, 5th Regiment Minnesota Volunteers. Regimental Records 1862=1902.
Goodhue County, MN	Birth, marriage and property records.
Rice County, MN	Birth and marriage records.
Richland County, ND	Property records.
North Dakota State University	A History of Richland County, Richland County Historical Society, 1977. Crandall, Horace B., Richland County, 1886. Dakota Territory Census, 1885. Early Community History, Kindred North Dakota, 1870-1900. Göl Lutheran Church, Kindred, North Dakota. Haugen, Mrs. Jorgen, The History of Sheyenne Township, 1974. Kindred Centennial, 1880-1980. Plat maps, 1897, 1986, 1996.
Jody Sorenson	Otterson genealogy.

Print

Allen, Stacy D.	Blue and Gray Magazine Visitors Guide, Corinth Mississippi , Blue and Gray Magazine, 2007.
Ballard, Michael B.	The Campaign for Vicksburg – National Park Civil War Series , Eastern National, 2007.
Bearss, Edwin	Fields of Honor , National Geographic, 2006.
Catton, Bruce	The Civil War , American Heritage Press, 1960.
Daniel, Larry J.	The Battle of Shiloh – National Park Civil War Series , Eastern National, 1998.
Esposito, Vincent J., Brigadier General	The West Point Atlas of War – The Civil War , Tess Press, 1995.
Everhart, William C. et. al.	Vicksburg National Military Park Handbook , Historical Print and Map Company, 2010.
Foote, Shelby	The Civil War (three volumes), 1958
Grant, Ulysses S.	The Personal Memories of U.S. Grant , Smithmark Publishers, 1994.
Hubbard, L. F.	Narrative and Rosters of the Fifth Minnesota Regiment, A Reprint from Minnesota in the Civil and Indian War , Park Genealogical Books.
Horn, Stanley F.
MacDonald, John	The Historical Atlas of the Civil War , Chartwell Books, Inc. 2009.
Rosholt, Jerry	Ole Goes to War – Men From Norway Who Fought in America's Civil War , Vesterheim Norwegian-American Museum, 2003.
Sandburg, Carl	Abraham Lincoln (four volumes), 1939
Smith, Hampton	Brother of Mine, the Civil War Letters of Thomas and William Christie , Minnesota Historical Society Press, 2011.
Ward, Geoffrey, Rick Burns and Ken Burns	The Civil War, an Illustrated History , 1990
Zimmerman, Mark	Guide to Civil War Nashville , Battle of Nashville Preservation Society, 2004.

Electronic

bonps.org	Critical Action of the Battle of Nashville.
books.google.com	The War of the Rebellion, a compilation of the official records of the Union and Confederate armies.
books.google.com	Annual Report of the Adjutant General to the Legislature of Minnesota Session of 1864 , Fredrick Driscoll State Printer, 1863.
books.google.com	Minnesota In The Civil and Indian Wars, 1861-1865, volumes I & II , Pioneer Press, 1899.
boysof61.org	Boys of 61 – Unit Histories, Fifth Minnesota Volunteer Infantry.
civilwar.org	Battle of Corinth from America's Civil War Magazine.
civilwargazette.wordpress.com	Camp Joe Holt, Joe Holt Hospital in Jeffersonville, Indiana , the Civil War Gazette, 2008.
civilwarindex.com	Civil War Index – 5 th Minnesota Infantry in the Civil War.
davemanuel.com	Inflation Calculator.
en.wikipedia.org	Siege of Vicksburg.
en.wikipedia.org	Richmond Louisiana.
en.wikipedia.org	Vicksburg Mississippi.
en.wikipedia.org	Battle of Nashville.
en.wikipedia.org	Second Corinth Union Order of Battle.
en.wikipedia.org	Second Battle of Corinth.
family search.org	Free Family History and Genealogical Records: Minnesota State Census 1855, 1860, 1865, 1870, 1875, 1880, North Dakota State Census 1900, 1910, 1920 and selected Norwegian records. gutenberg.org	Sherman, William Tecumseh, Memories of General William T. Sherman , volumes 1, 2, 3.
itd.nps.gov	Union Minnesota Volunteers – 5 th Regiment, Minnesota Infantry.
mnhs.org	Furness, Marion Ramsey, Governor Ramsey and Frontier Minnesota: Impressions from His Diary. and Letters from Minnesota History , December, 1947.
nps.gov/vick	Organization of Civil War Armies.
rootsweb.ancestry.com	The Great Rebellion – The American Civil War Accounts of Action and Rosters of the Men From Wabasha County, Minnesota.
westegg.com/inflation	Inflation calculation.

Jane Otterson Miller: Daughter of Arthur Otterson and Bessie Martin Otterson, Grand daughter of Ole Otterson and Alma Kallendar Otterson, Great grand daughter of Knud Otterson and Annie Benson Otterson. Retired teacher.

Vernon Ege: Retired teacher/school administrator, lives with wife Jane near the Mississippi River in Anoka, Minnesota.